Each of the essays in this book were intended to focus on the same issue--the inmate's situation in an institutional context. Each chapter approaches the central issue from a different vantage point, each introduction drawing upon a different source in sociology and having little direct relation to the other chapters.

In January 2011, this journal published an editorial by Seamus

MacSuibhne ('Erving Goffman's Asylums 50 years on') drawing attention to their role in humanising patients and to patterns that dehumanise them.

Goffman's essays accelerated understanding of the complexities of the physical and social environment affecting the behaviour of psychiatric patients, including beliefs, values, roles, policies, procedures and rules.

Asylums is a book of Essays based upon Goffman's sociological work in total institutions, particularly mental hospitals. The essay on the characteristics of total institutions is a brilliant description of institutions and how they function and create the subjects contained within them.

The main focus is, on the world of the inmate, not the world of the staff. A chief concern is to develop a sociological version of the structure of the self. Each of the essays in this book were intended to focus on the same issue--the inmate's situation in an institutional context. Each chapter approaches the central issue from a different vantage point, each introduction drawing upon a different source in sociology and having little direct relation to the other chapters.
